Project Presentation of CO-OP Project at Industry (Module-2) (22CS421)

On

AI in HealthCare

Pankaj Thakur
2210992017

Supervised By
Dr. Monika

Department of Computer Science and Engineering,
Chitkara University, Punjab

Introduction

The healthcare sector is undergoing a profound transformation driven by advancements in Artificial Intelligence (AI). With the exponential growth of medical data, traditional healthcare systems face limitations in processing, analyzing, and interpreting complex datasets. AI technologies provide scalable and efficient solutions by leveraging computational power and advanced algorithms.

AI enables automation of repetitive tasks, enhances diagnostic precision, and supports real-time decision-making. Technologies such as machine learning (ML), deep learning (DL), and natural language processing (NLP) allow healthcare professionals to extract meaningful insights from structured and unstructured data.

Despite these advancements, healthcare systems globally face challenges such as rising operational costs, shortage of skilled professionals, and increasing patient demand. AI has the potential to address these issues by improving efficiency and reducing workload.

This paper aims to provide a detailed review of AI applications in healthcare, highlighting benefits, challenges, ethical concerns, and future research directions.

Abstract

Artificial Intelligence (AI) has rapidly emerged as a transformative technology in healthcare, enabling improved diagnostic accuracy, predictive analytics, and personalized treatment strategies. This review paper presents a comprehensive analysis of AI applications in healthcare, focusing on machine learning, deep learning, and natural language processing techniques. A systematic literature review methodology based on PRISMA guidelines was adopted to evaluate relevant studies published between 2018 and 2026. The findings indicate that AI significantly enhances clinical decision-making, reduces human error, and optimizes hospital operations. However, challenges such as data privacy concerns, algorithmic bias, lack of transparency, and high implementation costs remain critical barriers. The study concludes that successful integration of AI in healthcare requires strong ethical governance, robust data management frameworks, and interdisciplinary collaboration.

Literature Review

AI improves medical diagnosis, especially in imaging (X-rays, MRIs, CT scans)
Enhances hospital management by optimizing scheduling and patient flow
Predictive analytics helps forecast diseases and treatment outcomes
NLP extracts insights from clinical records and supports decision-making
Challenges include data privacy, bias, and lack of transparency
Research gaps: limited datasets, poor generalization, data dependency, lack of real-world validation

Methodology

Research Design
Systematic Literature Review using PRISMA framework
Focus on AI applications in healthcare

Data Sources
IEEE Xplore
PubMed
Scopus
Google Scholar

Methodology

Search Strategy
Keywords: Artificial Intelligence, Machine Learning, Deep Learning, Healthcare
Boolean logic used to refine results
Inclusion Criteria
Published between 2018–2026
Peer-reviewed articles
Relevant to AI in healthcare

Methodology

Exclusion Criteria
Duplicate studies
Non-English papers
Irrelevant topics
Study Selection (PRISMA)
Identified: 120 papers
Screened: 80 papers
Eligible: 45 papers
Included: 20 papers

Result

Benefits of AI in Healthcare
High diagnostic accuracy
Faster decision-making
Reduced medical errors
Improved operational efficiency
Challenges
Data privacy & security risks
Algorithmic bias
High implementation cost
Lack of regulatory standards

Discussion

Discussion

The results indicate that AI has strong potential to improve healthcare systems. However, successful adoption depends on addressing ethical and technical challenges. Collaboration between healthcare professionals, data scientists, and policymakers is essential.

Conclusion & Further Work

AI is reshaping healthcare by improving efficiency, accuracy, and patient outcomes. However, its adoption is hindered by ethical, technical, and regulatory challenges.

Future research should focus on:

- Developing explainable AI models
- Improving data privacy frameworks
- Enhancing model generalization
- Establishing global AI regulations

Thank You